THE INTOLERANCE OF WOMAN. From Every Saturday.

There is nothing that exasperates an intelligent woman more than the asinine confidence with which inferior men are in the habit of dogmatizing on the differences between the sexes, and indicating what they are pleased to call the "appropriate sphere" of woman. With the quick intuition characteristic of the feminine mind, she sees instantly that these gentlemen are talking of something on which they do not deign to exercise what little power of thinking they possess; that the pompons nothings, so wisely mouthed, are not judgments to be discussed, but insults to be resented. Heaven forbid that we should enter into a controversy where the lorgest grasp and the most delicate discrimination of mind have been so often at fault! Still, there is one secondary question, relating to facts rather than to principles, which we will venture to empha-

our heads very high to-day. We take a generous and dignified view of things. Our honor Intolerance is the curse of the world. Now may not be questioned. The injustice of women to men is something which we will not consider, though it might furnish endless topics for subtle disquisitions. The intolerance we specially desire to mark is that which women entertain for each other. Every man who has appeared as the champion of "Woman's Rights' will tell you, if he is candid, that he finds his bitterest opponents in women. Those who do not sympathize with him, in his general principles, oppose him in a way to which men are accustomed in their controversies with other men. A certain neutral ground of reason is admitted, by the most prejudiced men, as necessary to be set apart, if any subject is to be discussed; the prejudiced women invade the narrowest strip of ground where opposing minds can meet in fair discussion, and come into direct contact with their opponents, substituting the passionate assertion of their swift perceptions for argument. They seem to be incompetent, even in a matter affecting the rights of their own sex, to look at things in their relations. The men who most profoundly disbelieve in "Woman's Rights," are everywhere outdone in unreasonableness by the feminine antagonists of the doctrine.

Even when women are combined in associations for the purpose of asserting their "rights," they do not succeed in being tolerant of each other as individuals. In public Mary puffs Jane, and Jane puffs Mary; in private they have as keen a perception of each other's faults and shortcomings as though they were rival belies, and are apt to be as sharp and frank in its expression. Man's inhumanity to man has made "countless housands mourn" for many ages; but what shall we say of woman's inhumanity to woman?

The explanation of the intolerance of women may, however, be said to arise, in a great degree, from the fact that they have formerly been excluded from the real business of life. The conduct of government has heretofore been limited to men. The occupations, mechanical, commercial, and professional, by which a family is supported, have heretofore been confined to the masculine "head of the family." But in mingling as a force in the affairs of government and business, each man comes into collision with other men, just as intolerant as himself. He soon finds that he must, as citizen, workman, merchant, or thinker, compromise with his opponents. Men quickly learn that they have no choice between killing each other or having some toleration for each other. From this knowledge proceed most of the customs, usages, and laws which we call civilization. The caprices of individuality are checked and limited by the constant collision of individualities. A neutral ground of reason, of common sense, is accordingly established. All men feel that, unless they submit to the decisions of this common sense, they must fight it out on some prescribed line forever. In the interests of peace they consent to be reasonable and tolerant.

MORRIS, TASKER & CO, Philadelphia, Jan. 22, 1870. It is plain that women have not heretofore been subjected to that austere education of facts by which men have been somewhat emancipated from the caprices of individuality. If the minds of women would be enlarged by giving them the right to vote, and the right to contend with men in all the enterprises of industry no intelligent man would oppose their claims. The narrowness and folly of some of the champions of "Woman's Rights" are the real obstacles to the success of their cause. Men are, as we have said, intolerant enough; but to add a new intolerance to that under which the world now groans would give no additional impulse to the advancement of the human race.
